APH's Tim Feddema Recognized by Northwood University

St. Cloud, Minn. — November 15, 2018 — Automotive Parts Headquarters Inc. (APH) announces that Tim Feddema, marketing manager, has been recognized with Northwood University's Automotive Aftermarket Management Education Award (AAMEA).

Presented at the 2018 AAMEA Luncheon during this year's Automotive Aftermarket Parts Expo (AAPEX) show in Las Vegas, the award is reserved for industry leaders throughout the country who have made noteworthy contributions while demonstrating a substantial commitment to education within, and outside of the industry. Feddema was one of eight industry leaders to receive the award.

Commenting on the announcement, Keith Pretty, president and CEO of Northwood University, stated, "This award is Northwood University's recognition of substantial dedication from these recipients over a number of years, to the educational process and the automotive aftermarket."

Pretty added, "Our honorees devote notable time and energy to education, making a worthwhile contribution within their industry, but also outside of it."

Feddema has been a part of the APH team for more than 36 years. He is also an active volunteer of the American Cancer Society, a member of the Knights of Columbus, a board member at St. Benedict's Senior Community and a foundation board member at the St. Cloud Technical and Community College.
